BILL SUMMARY

Synopsis:

HB 47 establishes criteria within the school personnel act to provide non-licensed school personnel and licensed educational assistants with due-process protection after completing one contract year of service. Currently, school employees must complete three consecutive contract years of service to earn due-process protections.

FISCAL IMPLICATIONS

SIGNIFICANT ISSUES

HB 47 would establish tenure for educational assistants and non-licensed school personnel after one year of employment by creating property rights for employees that are not directly responsible for the instructional program of students.

HB 47 allows employees to claim property on positions that fluctuate often from year to year and are considered non-essential positions in school settings. While these employees currently obtain property rights after three years of satisfactory service, providing those rights after one year promote non-renewals for first year employees, as districts may not want to commit to these positions long-term. As a result, this places a severe restriction on superintendents and charter school directors in determining staffing from year to year based on student needs. Educational assistants have varied roles and training, and their placement in schools can be necessary based on certain needs of students for individual supervision, support for certain classrooms, etc. Depending on the fluctuation of students and population within districts and schools, having educational assistants and other support personnel obtain property rights will place an undue burden on the district when the specific service is no longer needed.
