

ARE YOU PURSUING THE STATE SEAL OF BILINGUALISM-BILITERACY? BECOME AN EDUCATOR AND TEACH MULTILINGUAL LEARNERS!

Educators have the capacity to enact positive social change in their communities through culturally sustaining pedagogy (Alim and Paris, 2017). If you are pursuing the State Seal of Bilingualism-Biliteracy, it is likely you recognize the importance of culturally and linguistically sustaining teaching and could make a difference in your community! Does teaching sound appealing to you? Check out the following steps you can take to become an educator:

1. Do some research

Look up licensure and teacher preparation program requirements. The state of New Mexico requires that teachers be licensed. To obtain a license, you need a bachelor's degree. You can earn a bachelor's degree through a number of educator preparation programs in New Mexico. Visit the New Mexico Public Education Department's webpage on pathways to educator licensure to see a list of in-state educator preparation programs. These programs may differ in terms of cost, the number of credit hours students are required to complete, focus areas, and other factors. Explore each program website to learn what is expected of students who enroll.

2. Apply to a college or university

In most cases, you must be accepted by a college or university before you can apply to an educator preparation program. Be sure to review application requirements and deadlines. Are ACT or SAT scores required? Do you need to order official transcripts? Making note of priority deadlines and application requirements your junior year of high school will help you plan ahead and apply for admission on time. Many college and university application deadlines fall between August and February.

3. Seek financial aid

Don't let the cost of higher education keep you from pursuing a degree in teacher education! You may qualify for financial aid that can cover the cost of your education. Check out the scholarships available through the New Mexico Higher Education Department. See the back of this flyer for more information about state-funded financial aid.

4. Meet with an advisor

Advisors help students enroll in the right courses and stay on track to graduate. After being admitted to a college or university, ask an advisor how to apply to an educator preparation program. Once accepted, you should meet with an advisor regularly to ensure you fulfill all program requirements. Advisors can also provide information about academic support and new funding sources. They want you to succeed!

5. Complete program requirements

Teacher preparation programs often require students to complete field experiences or student teaching in addition to courses. Student teaching allows you to apply what you've learned and grow as an educator. Some programs even offer paid teacher residencies or paid student teaching! Use these experiences to ask experienced teacher-mentors questions and build relationships with people in the field of education.
